St. Paul's Cathedral—West Front. The fifth largest church in Christendom and the most important Renaissance building in England, stands on the top of Ludgate Hill. It is the third, possibly the fourth, cathedral erected on this site, and a Temple to Diana is thought to have preceded the churches that have stood here successively since 610. The present building, which was begun in 1675 after the Great Fire of London (1666) was completed in 35 years, its architect being Sir Christopher Wren.
